

The Common Repository is a repository from SARI service designed to researchers affiliated institutions in the national scientific system (including research centers, public or private universities, polytechnic institutes) who do not have their own institutional repository. Through the Common Repository, these investigators now have a place where they can archive and make accessible to its scientific output (articles published, accepted and published communications in conferences, theses and dissertations approved).

The registration in the Common Repository is made by the institution. After that membership, the institution is responsible for managing the section of the common repository assigned to it concerning the admission of the authors and deposits.

The presence of institutions in the Common Repository can constitute a base for a future repository. As with other repositories, the repository is indexed by the Portal RCAAP. There is available a more detailed description of the operating conditions of the Common Repository .